Preface

IN presenting this, the first Directory of South San Francisco, we have endeavored to make it as correct as possible and a book that will meet the requirements of the residents and business men alike. The publishers take great pride in this book, and have tried to get out a Directory that will not only benefit the people of South San Francisco as a Directory, but something that can be sent with pride to different cities of the United States, and be a medium that will bring new residents to your city. In connection with the publication of this Directory, every house and place of business has been numbered.

In this enterprise we have met with the hearty support of the citizens and we herewith thankfully acknowledge the generosity of the people.

Respectfully,
 DIRECTORY PUBLISHING CO.

South San Francisco

Located at the southern gate of, and distant but four miles from the city of San Francisco, it occupies the southern slope of the San Bruno mountains, extending from Baden station on the west to San Bruno Point and the waters of San Francisco Bay on the east, and from the territory of the Crocker estate on the north to the old Mission San Jose road on the south, embracing a total area in one compact body of nearly four thousand acres. All that portion of the big tract lying east of the Bay Shore Railway, and extending to San Bruno Point and the Bay of San Francisco, was set apart exclusively for factory sites, and all the land west from the Bay Shore Railway was laid out into blocks, lots, avenues, streets, alleys and squares, as a business and residence district.

The business district proper occupies the comparatively level land lying east of Maple avenue and extending to the Bay Shore Railroad. This is the only territory within which saloons are permitted. Whilst this district is set apart for business, there are nevertheless many residences located within its confines.

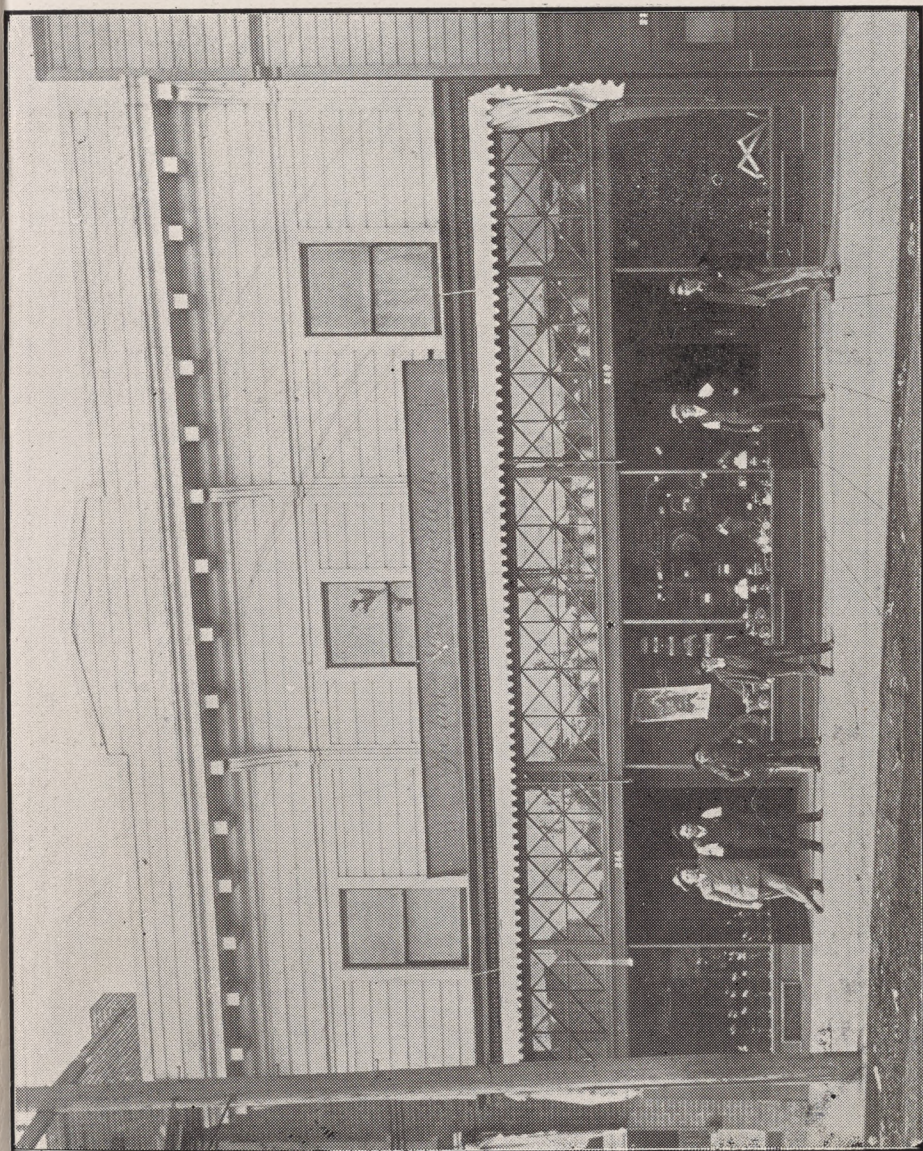

The residence district is a grand division, one and a half miles from east to west, by one mile from north to south, embracing a thousand acres of level plateau, undulating hills and sunny slopes, with the San Bruno Mountains rising 1,100 feet above the sea as a sheltering background to the north; to the south a broad and smiling valley; and for its eastern prospect the blue waters of the broad bay of San Francisco. The lots in this ideal residence district, provided for South San Francisco home owners, are of uniform size, 50 by 140 feet, with a broad street in front and an alley 20 feet wide in the rear. Many streets are graded, cement sidewalks laid, sewers and water, and an extensive system of mains have been put in the principal streets.

South San Francisco's founders planned an industrial city, in which its wage earners should be home owners, realizing the economic fact that the man who owns his home is a permanent, as well as a better workman. The plans of the founders of this young city have thus far been practically realized. Of the dwelling houses already completed, fully half have been built and are owned and occupied by resident workmen.

The public school has always taken first place in South San Francisco. Sixteen years ago, when the town was founded, the people voted $10,000, and built the first school house. Last year $20,000 in bonds were voted, and another fine school building is nearly completed.

The religious element is active, earnest and well represented here. There are three church buildings completed, and out of debt, with regular services, viz., the Protestant Episcopal, the Catholic and Methodist Episcopal churches.

A first-class hospital is established, and has met with such success that its proprietors are preparing to erect a commodious, modern building for hospital purposes.

Its bank, organized two years ago with a paid-up capital of $50,000, and $5,000 surplus, with safe deposit vaults and a savings department, paid a dividend to its stockholders before the end of its first year's existence. The deposits have already reached the sum of $225,000. A local building and loan association has become an active and potent factor in home building and town development.

The local Board of Trade is a live organization. It has already secured the passage of a county ordinance, protecting the merchants of this town and county against peddlers and traveling order agents. It is now at work to improve the street car and railroad service and the lighting of the streets.

The city was laid out on solid lines, and today it can boast of its schools and churches, its independent water-works plant, its sewerage system, its electric street car service, its electric light and power company, its bank, its theatre, its railway service, its deep water shipping facilities, its fine homes, and above all, its manufacturing enterprises. Of these, the great works of the American Smelting and Refining Company, now building, will easily take the lead. Upwards of $5,000,000 will be expended in this gigantic plant, the largest of its kind in the world.

Next in importance is the Western Meat Company, employing 750 men. This is the pioneer industry of South San Francisco.

The W. P. Fuller's white lead works is another long-established industry at this place. They give employment to nearly 300 men. Their plant, representing an expenditure of upwards of $1,000,000, is more than its name implies. They manufacture, besides white lead, all kinds of high grade lubricating and painters' oils, and almost every kind of painters' supplies. A large part of their plant is devoted to the manufacture of heavy and bevel plate glass mirrors.

The Steiger Pottery Works is another high-class long-established industry at this place, employing many men and being a recognized leader in the manufacture of pottery, fire-brick, mantels, sewer pipe and terra cotta. Mr. W. E. Dennison, of the City Street Improvement Company, is president of this company and L. A. Steiger is its general manager.

The Pacific Jupiter Steel Company has a fine plant, and by a patented process of its own, transforms common scrap steel into the finest and highest grade steel. The capacity of the plant has been increased annually since its establishment, and now employs 150 men.

The Alexander Brick Company is an old institution of the town. It has twenty acres of fine land on the northern water front of the town; has the continuous automatic kilns with the latest and best brick machinery, and turns out a very fine grade of building bricks. It employs some fifty men, and Thomas Butler, the well-known builder and contractor of San Francisco, is its president.

• The Electric Power and Light Company has a first-class plant and transmitting station here, and furnishes power and light to the town and its factories, and to the entire northern portion of the peninsula, from Ocean View to Millbrae. This company is a potent factor in the development of the town and adjacent territory.

• The Mill and Lumber Company, of which Frank Knowles is manager, employs some twenty men in its planing mill and lumber yard. The only trouble thus far has been to get material fast enough, and in sufficient quantity, to supply its rushing and rapidly-increasing trade.

Several large industries have recently purchased sites and will soon be enrolled as active factors in this rapidly developing city. Add to these a score of smaller but active industries, and a foundation is presented of which any municipality could well be proud, and promising a future the limitations of which no man can compute.

Its deep water shipping facilities and independent system of railroad trackage and service, throughout its manufacturing district, will add rapidly to this nucleus of industries.

South San Francisco is a railroad terminal, and all railroads have equal facilities for handling the product of its industries.

While other towns on the peninsula, like Palo Alto, with its University, Redwood City, Burlingame, and San Mateo, with their wealthy homes, may each in its specialty excel, yet in all that goes to make a solid and permanent community, South San Francisco stands pre-eminent, and will soon be recognized as first in rank among all the centers of industry situated around San Francisco Bay.

The growth of South San Francisco has been phenomenal, and many predict a population of at least 20,000 within the next few years.

Announcement has been made that soon half-hourly railroad train service will be instituted on the Coast Railroad. This will bring South San Francisco within fifteen minutes of the business center of San Francisco, and coupled with the present excellent street car service, makes of South San Francisco much more than a suburb.

The residence district is rapidly being sold to actual home builders, and hundreds of houses are in process of construction and in contemplation.

The site of South San Francisco is owned exclusively by the South San Francisco Land and Improvement Company, of which W. J. Martin is the sole agent.

South San Francisco is up to date in stores and mercantile houses. It has fine grocery stores, two hardware, three meat markets, one dry goods, one gentlemen's furnishings, one millinery, one emporium, two bakeries, two fruit and vegetable, and one pharmacy incorporated. All are first class, with stock and environment which would do credit to a large city.

The town of South San Francisco is drawing and will continue to draw its population from the great middle class. Its prosperity is founded upon two essential factors of commercial and municipal greatness, viz., aggregated capital and organized labor. In other words, it is an industrial town, where capital and labor combine and unite to found and build a large and prosperous center of manufactures. Here the man of moderate means finds the land for a home in a near-by residence district, at reasonable prices, and purchasable on easy terms, but back of this is the predominant proposition that at the door of this new home the home builder is assured of regular and constant employment at good wages, to provide the means to maintain the home when builded. This is the advantageous feature South San Francisco possesses in the highest degree—and the characteristic which is to make the town the favorite choice of all men of moderate means.
